Dear Editor,

I am deeply concerned by the lack of awareness in our community of the ongoing need to care for our valuable water resources. When is our community of guzzlers going to recognise that they hold the key to our children's future?

It saddens me to think that we seem to have forgotten the two child-easy rules of good water management.

Firstly, reduce the amount of water that we consume on a daily basis. Lowering water consumption can be easily achieved by using dual flush toilets, having shorter showers and not doing the washing until you have a full load.

Secondly, the use of 'grey' water is an underdeveloped resource in our community. People have long rejected the idea of using dirty bath water or water from their washing machines for other purposes. Why not use it to water your garden or wash the car?

I urge all members of our community to follow these simple steps so that our children's water supply will be secured in the years to come.

Yours faithfully,
