Owls

Owls are a nocturnal bird and they are best known for their large eyes.

Some people think that owls look like they are wearing reading glasses. This can make them seem wise. But owls don't use their large eyes for reading.

Owls hunt by night for small prey such as mice, frogs and lizards. Owls grab their prey with their sharp claws called talons. They have well-developed night vision and use their large eyes for hunting prey in the dark. Owls also have keen hearing and can hunt by hearing alone if they need to.

Because owls are nocturnal, they depend on camouflage to hide them while they sleep during the day. The colour of their feathers, as well as the way owls stand, helps them to blend into their surroundings.

So, if you need information about hunting – ask an owl. But for anything else, you had better head to the library and do your own research!

Can you use the information in the text to label the diagram above to help readers understand the information report?
